

SAFE STORAGE METHODS - include the locking cable devices being used on these rifles, which go through the barrel and render them inoperable. Other methods include locking metal cabinets such as were also on display.

Safe storage and transport highlight firearms information meeting

An information meeting regarding the safe storage, handling and transportation of firearms drew a large crowd of Elk Point, St. Paul and surrounding area residents last Monday in Elk Point.

MLA Paul Langevin commended the Elk Point Advisory Policing Committee for spearheading the meeting on this important issue. While the proposed new federal gun control law was not discussed at the meeting, Langevin said "you don't have to convince me" that it may not be suitable for Albertans, but that being well informed about the laws currently in place will help Albertans to be safe gun owners.

Sgt. John Humphrey, who chaired the gathering, introduced panel guests Irv Yaverbaum, special advisor to the Crown Prosecutor regarding Canadian gun laws, and George Reed, Chief Firearms Officer for the province. Humphrey thanked Don Torok of the Advisory Committee for his work in arranging the meeting, and Gary Czerkowski for providing the displays of gun storage units and devices.

Humphrey explained that the RCMP has "quite a bit of discretion in interpreting the gun laws, and ask themselves if an infraction of these laws is harmful to the gun owner or others, and if it is likely to be repeated, before proceeding with prosecution. He explained when search warrants are required, and said that if the RCMP has reasonable or probable grounds to believe it is necessary to do so, they can search a person, vehicle or any building except a dwelling if necessary, and seize a firearm if it is in the interests of safety of that person or another person. However, he noted, if there was time to do so, the officer would have to obtain a search warrant.

The laws pertaining to predator control were also explained. Farmers on land they own or control can carry unrestricted weapons (rifles and shotguns) in or on a vehicle, provided they are unloaded. If they leave that weapon, it must be locked up and out of sight. On an all terrain vehicle, it must be rendered inoperable and locked in a case. Prohibitions include shooting from vehicles, shooting across roads or close to buildings, and carrying loaded weapons.

Irv Yaverbaum explained the portions of the criminal code as pertaining to misuse of firearms, and noted that while he interprets the federal law, he works for the province. He explained the penalties for misuse of firearms, which include using a firearm to commit an indictable offense (eg. robbery), and pointing a firearm, whether loaded or not. The careless use, handling and storage of firearms is "a very common offense," and Yaverbaum said that using a firearm without due care for the safety of others has led to "some very sad situations."

There are a number of regulations pertaining to the use of firearms, and are "fairly complicated, but easier to change than the criminal code." These range all the way from possession of a weapon at a public meeting to being in a vehicle in which you know there is a restricted weapon.

EPSRA bids goodbye to Amoco, welcomes Elan

Just two hours after the official completion of the sale of Amoco Canada's interests in the Elk Point area to Elan Energy, Elk Point Surface Rights Association hosted a luncheon bidding farewell to Amoco superintendent Ron Johnson and welcoming Elan superintendent Bernie Heinrichs.

EPSRA president Alban Bugej expressed the association's regrets at seeing Amoco leave the local oilfield.

"Throughout the long years when Amoco was the prime operator within this oilfield, a number of precedents were achieved in the area of relations between an oil company and the agricultural community impacted by its operations.

"The nine day ERCB hearing of 1982, when Amoco and EPSRA confronted each other, was the longest hearing to that date. A few years later, the establishment of the first sliding fee schedule for multiple well sites was negotiated between EPSRA and the then Vice President of Amoco, Sherril Moore - another precedent. After Amoco acquired Dome Petroleum, Bob Scarborough, the former Dome General Manager for Heavy Oil, took over as Vice President of Heavy Oil for Amoco. From then on, the relations between Amoco and the impacted agricultural community began to improve. The previous confrontation scenario turned into one of cooperation.

"By 1993 these improved business relations resulted in another precedent being set between an oil company and the surface owners on whose lands it operates. In view of the reality of the time when a large number of wells were shut down and Amoco desired to reduce its fixed costs, the concept of annual lease payments bearing some relation to actual oil production from a lease site was developed. In view of its novelty, this concept was offered to landowners as a voluntary option. All previous agreements were grandfathered. This concept, which

Yavebaum explained that Firearms Acquisition Certificates have been required since 1979. "If you owned guns before that time, you don't have to have a FAC to keep them. If you purchased one since then, you needed a FAC to do so." He explained the application process, which involves an application form, a fee, and references. Some exceptions are made to the minimum age rule of 18 years, he noted, usually in an aboriginal setting where hunting is required for a livelihood. Also, youths 12 to 18 can use a firearm under the supervision of an adult to learn its safe use in hunting and target shooting.

George Reed, who is responsible for firearms control in Alberta and who administers FACs and firearms safety, says the regulations "boil down to common sense. There aren't many who don't keep their firearms under lock and key in normal circumstances." This stops not only theft, but spontaneous misuse of the firearms. If a person can't get and use a firearm readily, they won't use it to shoot someone on the spur of the moment, Reed feels.

One way to stop misuse is with a trigger lock, which can be electronic, magnetic, combination or mechanical, while another way is with a cable with a lock which secures it through the barrel.

An Alberta amendment to the federal law helps farmers, who according to the original document, could not take a rifle along to check the cows without having a trigger lock on it, thus rendering it inoperable - not much help if a predator is spotted.

For storage, Reed said a firearm must be unloaded, rendered inoperable with a secure locking device or by removal of the bolt or bolt carrier, or stored in a container, receptacle or room that is kept securely locked and that is constructed so that it is not readily broken open.

Unrestricted firearms may be displayed, as long as they are unloaded and equipped with a locking device which renders them inoperable.

Unrestricted firearms may be carried in a vehicle if they are unloaded and the vehicle is attended by a person who is allowed to have these firearms. If the person leaves the vehicle, the firearms must be out of sight and the vehicle locked.

Storage of restricted weapons (eg. handguns) requires that they be unloaded, affixed with a secure locking device, and stored in a container, vault, safe or room which cannot be readily broken open. Ammunition may be stored with the handgun if the gun is properly stored in such a container, vault or safe.

Transportation of a handgun requires that it be unloaded, rendered inoperable with a secure locking device and locked in a case or container that cannot readily be broken open during transportation.

Reed said of the regulations that "a lot of them are common sense," and are designed to protect your children, neighbors and neighbors' children, and visitors to your home.

EPSRA welcomes Elan

which still requires further development and is now being emulated by other surface rights organizations and mineral operators in other parts of the province, was hammered out between the EPSRA and Amoco's management team, which included Bruce Lounds, General Manager of Heavy Oil and Ron Johnson, local Superintendent."

EPSRA affirmed to the impacted agricultural community in the Elk Point area of its resolve to continue working to protect property rights. "Having achieved our goals of fair payments for the lands we lease to the oil industry, our focus is now shifting to environmental issues," Bugej said. "The protection of the land was always the primary purpose of the Elk Point Surface Rights Association. With stricter environmental regulations being legislated, that purpose will require sharper focus."

Present environmental legislation is being designed to hold the landowner more and more responsible for the environmental stewardship of his property, Bugej said, with the landowner, in the end, being held liable for any environmental infringements which took place on his land, irrespective of who committed the infringements or when they were committed. Because of this, certain questionable practices to which a blind eye has been turned up to now, have to be discontinued, he noted. "In future, we will be pressuring the oil and gas companies operating in the area to use only credible contractors for any land related operation or any other operation which could cause environmental damage."

Bugej said that throughout the "long and sometimes arduous relations the EPSRA had with Amoco's management, whether we were in agreement or not, our relations were always conducted in a businesslike manner guided by mutual respect. This is particularly true in regards to Amoco's present heavy oil management team, which includes Bruce Lounds and Ron Johnson, two gentlemen who we will miss and never forget."

Bugej welcomed Elan superintendent Bernie Heinrichs, who recently arrived from Calgary. "Our research of Elan's activities in other areas of Alberta is very positive. We are looking forward to doing business with this new company and on behalf of the agricultural community, I want to say, welcome, Elan."

Heinrichs said the newly arrived company knows it is important to be flexible in its operations, due to fluctuating prices. "Right now the price is good, and we're optimistic."

Elan has an ongoing relationship with Amoco planned. Elan has no refineries, and will be selling their oil to Amoco, who have refineries geared to handling the heavy oil. This supplies Elan with a ready market, and Amoco with a reliable source.

The luncheon was sponsored by Elk Point Sand and Gravel, whose owner, Harvey Aarbo, is a member of EPSRA. He recalled the difficult relationships between agricultural landowners and oil companies prior to the establishment of EPSRA, and the progressively better environment which has evolved since. Aarbo said he had had "a lot of dealings with Ron, and a lot of respect for him. I feel bad to see him go, and hope we can start off on the right foot with Elan."

Johnson, who is moving back to Calgary, said his 10 years in Elk Point "have been interesting from start to finish."

The 1885 Frog Lake uprising - more mysteries

By Robert W. Hendriks
Heinsburg historian

"Bodies shadowed by the mid-morning sun lay scattered about the isolated settlement of Frog Lake, North West Territories, on April 1, 1885. With two Oblate fathers among them, they were recent victims of a rebellious party of the Rattler Warrior Society, and a splinter group of Big Bear's Plains Crees led by war chief Wandering Spirit and Imasees, Big Bear's son.

Parks Canada tourist visuals at the site have long stated that nine people were killed that Thursday, but current historians, basing their arguments on new information mixed with a re-interpretation of the old, are convinced that as many as 18 died during this uprising, including two women and a baby. Who were these unknown victims and why were they involved?

There were 29 Frog Lake children attending the day school built near the mission by Oblate Father Fafard. Yellow Crane, as he was called by Frog Lake Cree because of his aging robe, was officially the teacher, but a Frenchman, a mysterious man named Michaux had been sent to Frog Lake by Bishop Grandin to teach while recovering from alcoholism. Details are slim but Michaux disappeared, never to be seen again. Was he among the identified bodies, a "young fine man" as described when found by the Alberta Field Force, lying face down near the mission with a mouthful of dirt, shot in the back?

In 1909 S. Sgt. Hall from the Onion Lake Detachment NWMP, directed by the government to gather the bodies from the graves scattered about the settlement and to re-bury them in the mission cemetery, performed this unpleasant duty in the summer sun, but was puzzled by the lack of the proper remains of blacksmith Charles Gouin and Indian Agent Thomas Quinn where they were supposed to have been buried. Even though graveyard crosses were erected in their honor, historians feel that these two victims, among others, still lie in unmarked graves in the vicinity, but where?

During the 1960s, the Alberta Department of Highways built a modern road through the middle of the settlement, destroying a historic stretch of the original trail to Onion Lake and obliterating other areas of the settlement in the process, including part of the original mission graveyard. Fathers Fafard and Marchand had been buried south of the mission graveyard where the new road passes, and although their bodies had been removed long before this time, their rough coffins remained. Were these destroyed during road construction?

Hundreds of items disappeared from the Frog Lake settlement, like silverware, household ornaments, personal valuables, money, weapons, tools and machinery, relics from the Catholic mission including the small church bell, and numerous articles taken from the two stores. Records show that among the many relic seekers visiting the site after the uprising, including the militia, numerous American teamsters hired by the government during the North West Rebellion passed by Frog Lake and one freighter was known to have carted off a hidden cache of over 800 pounds of items. How much of this material slipped across the U. S. border to become part of private collections? And how much sits on shelves or lies in trunks today across Canada or within scant miles of Frog Lake? Historians feel there is likely a substantial amount.

Will the truth ever be known? Some details will remain speculation, but the current intensive research into treaty settlements and the North West Rebellion will certainly shed new light on the Frog Lake story, as Native and Metis views become known, further documents come to light and as security restrictions on the thousands of classified government Rebellion and treaty documents are lifted.

And as the story concludes, once again may we hear the ring of the mission bell tolling the close of one of the most tumultuous events in the Canadian west.

Canada Remembers

The liberation of Holland

Canada Remembers is Canada's national and international program aimed at commemorating the 50th anniversary of the end of the Second World War, and ensuring that Canada's participation in the war is appropriately honored.

Canadian forces played an important role in liberating the Netherlands in the final days of the war. They had fought battles through France and Belgium and in the Rhineland campaign to reach the Dutch border. Although German troops in the Netherlands were weary and often inexperienced, they fought fiercely.

CANAL BY CANAL, HOUSE BY HOUSE

In the beginning of April 1945, Canadian forces entered Holland in the south from Belgium. Often helped with information provided by Dutch resistance fighters, Canadian troops moved across Holland, recapturing canals and farmland from the Germans. The Netherlands was completely free by May 5, 1945.

* Canadian orders were to push the German troops occupying the northeast back to the sea, and to drive German troops in the west back into Germany.

* Canadian forces liberated cities such as Amsterdam, Rotterdam and The Hague where Dutch citizens had almost reached the end of their endurance from misery and starvation.

* Canadian soldiers had to fight a house-by-house battle in Arnheim, clearing the city in two days.

* Canadian forces were well prepared to continue their push in western Holland beyond Utrecht all the way to the sea, but concern for the well-being of the Dutch citizens, who, having already been starved for months, ran the risk of having their country flooded if the panicked Germans opened the dykes, caused the advance to halt on April 12. On April 28, the Canadians negotiated a truce which permitted relief supplies to enter western Holland.

ENDING THE "HUNGER WINTER"

The "Hunger Winter" of 1944-45 had been a terrible time for the Dutch people. Food supplies were exhausted, fuel had run out and transportation was non-existent. Thousands of men, women and children perished of starvation and cold. On April 28, 1945, the Germans and Allied forces agreed to a short-term, formal truce so that food could be brought into Holland by air, sea, road and the inland waterways.

* The official daily ration per person in Holland by April 1945 was only 320 calories.

* To show their appreciation to the pilots who dropped food from the air, many Dutch people painted "Thank you, Canadians!" on their rooftops.

A JOYOUS WELCOME

No part of western Europe was liberated at a more vital moment than Holland, and the Dutch people cheered Canadian troops as one town after another was freed. The people of Holland have never forgotten their Canadian liberators. In honor of their gift of freedom, the Dutch people have donated tulip bulbs yearly to Canada, and both countries continue to hold joint memorial observations.

* A Dutch teenager's memory of Canadians liberating The Hague: "As the tank came nearer... there was a big hush over all the people, and it was suddenly broken by a big scream, as if it was out of the earth. And the people climbed on the tank, and they were crying. And we were running with the tanks and jeeps all the way into the city."

* Some members of the Dutch royal family lived in Canada during the war. For a brief time, in 1943, a bit of Canada became a bit of Holland. A room in the Ottawa Civic Hospital was declared Dutch territory so that Crown Princess Julianna's daughter, Margriet, could be born with Dutch citizenry.
